CAREER BRIEF

I am a professional with five and a half years of experience and a subject area expertise in Geopolitics and International Relations. I am academically qualified with a PhD in the subject. I carry a multi-disciplinary experience in the field of research cutting across areas of government policy research, think tanks and academics, science and technology research, political consulting, geopolitics, and corporate global risk analysis.

I have been able to work closely to provide corporates and threat intelligence teams, International and domestic stakeholders, and other interested parties to develop and provide insights on geopolitics and international relations and its impact on various cycles of business operations. I continue my academic interests by delivering visiting faculty lectures at several universities. I am also involved in advising publications and professionals in academic programs.

I have had the operational experience in setting up and heading a division in the previous stint driving research and policy insights as well as training analysts in research and writing. I have headed diverse teams including ones focusing on strategy and implementation as well as design.
